News and Notes

Trez Drake, Sandra Klein, Chris O'Byrne, and Joe Thomas are attending the American Association of Law Libraries annual meeting in San Antonio, TX July 12-15.

Rick Garnett was quoted in the New York Times article Among Justices, Considering a Divide Not of Gender or Politics, but of Beliefs on July 11.

Gerry Bradley was quoted in the National Catholic Register article Victory for Religious Freedom on July 9.

Rick Garnett and Steve Smith were among a group of Criminal Law scholars who filed a brief in support of the Petitioner in the case Yates v. United States. The brief focuses on the problem of overcriminalization and on the misuse of vague statutes to criminalize behavior far beyond what any ordinary person would understand to be prohibited.

Carter Snead was an invited contributor to the SCOTUSBlog's symposium on Hobby Lobby on July 3. His post is titled Symposium: RFRA post-Hobby Lobby: what now?

Peg Brinig and Nicole Garnett's book Lost Classroom, Lost Community: Catholic Schools' Importance in Urban America was reviewed by Nathan Glazer in Education Next. The title of the review is Catholic School Closures and the Decline of Urban Neighborhoods.

Linda Przybyszewski was interviewed by the South Bend Tribune about her book "The Lost Art of Dress" in the article Notre Dame professor says 1960s led to dressing down of Americans on July 9.

Linda will give two local public talks later this year related to her book “The Lost Art of Dress”:

- 1 to 4 p.m. Sept. 20 at Barnes & Noble Booksellers in Mishawaka. Co-sponsored by the Center for History, this event will be a program on history and clothing that will include a book reading, book signing, a design challenge and story hour for children.
- Noon Oct. 29 at Snite Museum of Art at Notre Dame. Przybyszewski will present a talk, “Dressing Up for Motoring,” in conjunction with an exhibit about vintage autos from the 1920s and 1930s.

Office Moves:

Ali Wruble moved to 1335 Biolchini Hall.
